Company Philosophy

Clark Construction Corporation was founded in 1983 by Christopher Clark, based on a singular mission statement: To establish the standard of High-end Residential Construction by which all others will be measured. This ambitious principle, uncompromised, has carried us forward since that time and is our driving force, exemplified by each and every member of the Clark Construction family, from our office staff to our field personnel. "Pride of craft" is implicit at every level. Our specialized brand of building, catering to the most discerning clientele allows us to excel across a broad spectrum of architectural styles, from museum quality Classical to cutting edge Progressive with practiced efficiency. A mid-sized corporation by design allows the Principal & Project Managers to personally take on the intricacies, details and standards of quality requisite of our established criterion at every stage of every project we undertake. Acknowledging the needs of our New York City market, we have learned to build not only beautifully, but efficiently. Ambitious scheduling requirements are met, costs are managed and the daily challenges particular to our industry and unique to every project are embraced. We create solutions. The nurturing of relationships with clients, architects, subcontractors and craftspeople is our mainstay. We do not consider these to be temporary business interactions, but lifelong commitments. The loyalty extended to us by this circle is surpassed only by ours to them, exemplified by the fact that many of these relationships commenced at our inception and continue to this day. After two decades of working in New York City, we find that our "total immersion" approach coupled with the vast combined experience of our staff leads to great success. Our goals are met and our standards endure.
